THE TUNEFUL NINE.

A Little Sketch of Classic Names You Will Often Meet With In Reading.

The people of ancient Greece used to say that Zeus (Jove or Jupiter) and Mne-mosyne (Memory) had nine daughters. In very old times these daughters were worshiped as goddesses of poetry and song un-der the names of muses. Later they were spoken of as presiding over all literature, spoken of as presiding over all interature, art and science. The stories which the an-

TERPSICHORE, GODDESS OF THE DANCE cients told concerning the muses varied a great deal. A writer in St. Nicholas, where the accompanying picture is found, at-tempts to tell only the things most widely believed concerning them, among which were the following:

Four dwelling places of the muses were Mounts Olympus, Helicon, Pindus and Clio (glory) was said to preside over history. In painting or sculpture she is usually represented with an open roll in her Euterpe (giver of pleasure) was the muse of lyric poetry, or that which is ex-pressive of the poet's own thought or feel-ing and is well adapted to song. She is usually represented with the double flute.

Thalia (the blooming one) represented the merry side of life. She was the muse of comedy, or dramatic composition in which mirth was the leading feature. Her emblems were a comic mask, often carried emblems were a comic mask, often carried in one hand, a crook or staff and usually a wreath of ivy eneireling her head.

Melpomene (the singing one) represented the stern and gloomy side of life. She was the muse of tragedy, or dramatic composition in which the leading characters usually meet death by violence. Her symbols were a mask expressive of horror or agony, a garland of vine leaves, the club of Hercules and buskins, actors' sandals. The last had thick soles, in order to make the wearer appear tall and dignified make the wearer appear tall and dignified Terpsichere (delighting in dance) is perhaps of all the muses most familiar to the general reader. She had charge of the choral song and dance. She is commonly represented as indulging in her favorite pastime. In one hand she carries a seven stringed lyre, the chords of which she strikes with a plectrum, or piece of ivory, bone or shell.

Erato (amorous) comes next with a nine stringed harp and plectrum. Sometimes she was merry, sometimes sad—of changeful mood, as lovers are, for Erato was the patron goddess of passionate poetry and of love music.

Polymnia (rich in song) often has no symbol, but carries her finger to her lips and looks up with thoughtful gaze. She was the muse of hymns and sacred songs. Urania (heaven) was the muse of astronomy. She carries a globe in one hand and a wand in the other.

Calliope (beautiful voice), though last in order, was first in importance. She was the mother of Orpheus, the wonderful musician who traveled with the Argonauts in Jason's quest. Her province was enice in Jason's quest. Her province was epic poetry, like the "Iliad" of Homer or the "Æneid" of Virgil. She is commonly shown with a stylus or metal pen and tab let and sometimes in the act of writing.

The Land of the White Elephant

News recently came of the death of the News recently came of the death of the king of Siam, and in case of no trouble occurring over the succession to the throne the crown prince, who is about 17 years of age, will reign in his stead, thus adding another to the list of the world's youthful sovereigns. The prince has been educated in part in England and is very proficient in the language.

He is fed upon fresh grass and sugar canes and plantains served in rich dishes, inhabits a building near the palace, enjoys the rank of nobility and is attended by a staff of officers, valets, etc. Tigers abound, and rhinoccroses, boars, wild pigs, elks and deer of many kinds tenant the woods. So Siam is an excellent region for the sportsman, especially as the climate is more healthful than that of many tropical countries. which is not really white, but of a light faving secured a relic of the glorious spening page in her history as a British iolony—namely, the sword worn by General Wolfe at the capture of Quebee in 1759. For nearly a century the sword lay a few feet under the ground on the heights of Abraham, where Wolfe fell mortally wounded, and even-tually found its way into the hands of a Toronto gentleman, Major Dunn, who used it in the charge of Balaklava. It has now been purchased in London from Major Dunn's descendants by the Hon. J. C. Patterson, Canadian minister of militia, in his private capacity, together with the medals which Major Dunn received for his serivces in the Crimea and elsewhere. It is significant of the change which times have brought in the relations between the French and English on the North American continent that French-Canadian papers such as La Minerve of Montreal are asking that the sword may be placed with honor in the dominion parliament at Ottawa, which English journals are reciprocating with the wish that the sword of the gallant French commander, Montcalm, should now be sought for and placed in the same casket as the sword of General Wolfe to emphasize the union of two races under one flag.—London Chroni-

Bright Arctic Nights.

Erroncous opinions are widely entertained concerning the character of the long winter nights of far northern regions. We are apt to think of such nights as being dark, gloomy and depressing in the extreme. As a matter of fact, they are brightened and made cheerful by brilliant moonlight, by the aurora borealis and by the reflective property of the broad, snow covered sur-

Attention was recently called to this subject at a meeting of the English Iron and Steel institute, when the ore treas ures of Scandinavia were discussed. The objection was raised against that part of the world as a mining country that for six months it was buried in almost continual night.

In reply to this the facts recited were pointed out, and it was shown that, in consequence of the noc-turnal brightness there, the people are able to carry on work throughout the year without interruption.

The absence of direct sunlight proves a less serious hindrance to their activities than is the oppressive heat endured under a perpendicular sun by the inhabitants of the equatorial regions of Making Dead Men Breathe.

Many methods of restoring the apparently dead have lately been advocated, but the most original plan is that inaugurated by Dr. de Baun. Dr. de Baun took it upon himself to state that if a man died simply for want of breath there is no good reason why he should not live, and the medico proceeded to prove his assertion. He passed a small rubber tube through the nose of an apparently dead infant and down into the throat. Closing the mouth, he forced air through the tube from a rubber bag, inflating the lungs. He then re-leased the pressure from the mouth and found, as he expected, that the elasticity of the muscles of the chest caused immediate contraction of the lungs, forming a complete respiration. This is said to have been kept up for 45 minutes, at the end of which time natural respiration was restored, and the life of the child was saved. The success of this experiment induced Dr. de Baun to make further tests, and he is reported to have discovered that animation may often be restored by this means within 15 minutes.

The Egg Ouestion In Hotels

The egg question in a hotel that laughs at expense in the endeavor to se cure for its guests what is more than palatable has the closest attention. For the most part the middle man operates here, though the eggs do not lie on his hands long. Among many hotels I have failed to find one that uses any but wargs, and even these are broken by skilled assistants separately before they are used by a cook or baker, for one faithless egg can wreck gallons of. soup or cake galore. In the Holland House this incidental duty means the breaking of $2,500 worth of eggs every month. Never less than 120 dozen are used per day. The Marlborough hotel averages 200 dozen every day. During the World's fair the Palmer House reached the average of 600 dozen.-Chautanquan.

A Tooth Lined Coffin.

There is no accounting for taste. A dentist died in a rural town in England a few days ago after spending over 50 years in pulling the molars of his fellow citizens. He had made it a hobby to keep all the teeth which he had drawn in the course of his professional career and took great pride in the collection. When his will was opened, it was found that he had ordered the collection of teeth to be placed with him in his coffin for burial. His heirs fulfilled his command, and almost 30,000 teeth were put into the coffin with the dead dentist. If some archeologist of a fu-ture century shall happen to open that grave, he will have "food for thought" and some difficulty perhaps in explaining the presence of so many teeth.— New York Tribune.

The Vatican Is Discouraged.

It is reported from Rome that the pope complains to his intimates that Vatican affairs were never so bad as now. "All the states," he said, according to The Corriere di Napoli, "are pre-occupied with the social question, the populations are surrounded with an unhealthy atmosphere or are in a condition of alarm and discomfort, and we are in the power of the enemy without a hope in the future." The sums derived from the St. Peter's pence are very small in spite of many pilgrimages, and the incomes from the papal possessions are much diminished.—London Chronicle. A Fable For Fathers

He was the son of a worthy Manchester citizen and had just returned from college. His father was a brusque, matter of fact man, who had no liking for anything pronounced, and he noticed with sorrow that his son returned with the latest thing in collars and various other insignia of a dukedow. dukedom. The old gentleman surveyed him critically when he appeared in his office and then blurted out, "Young man, you look like an idlot."

you look like an idlot."

Just at that moment, and before the young man had time to make a fitting reply, a friend walked in.

"Why, hello, Billy, have you returned?" he asked. "Dear me, how much you resemble your father!"

"So he has been telling me," replied Billy.

Billy.
And from that day to this the old gentleman has had no fault to find with his son.—Tit-Bits.

Something on Her Mind."

General Putnam's Duel. Every schoolboy is familiar with the story of "Putnam and the Wolf," but here is another story about the doughty Revolutionary general which is not so well

Some four years before the war of Inde-pendence Putnam offended a haughty regular officer, who looked upon the pro-vincials with contempt, by asserting that the latter were as courageous as the for mer. The dispute ran high, and at length the scarlet coated lieutenant asked scornfully:

"Dare you fight a duel with me!"
"Yes, at any moment," answered the provincial major.
provincial challenge you," said the licu-provinelal major.

"Then I challenge you," said the lieutenant. "Choose your weapons."

"Two kegs of gunpowder—one for you and one for me—are the weapons I choose," said Putnam; "the time, tomorrow morning at sunrise; the distance, 10 paces; the method, you to sit on one keg and I on the other, and a slow fuse attached to each to be lighted, and the one who sits longest to be declared the victor." who sits longest to be declared the victor.'
The lieutenant was annoyed, but wa compelled to accept the strange conditions.

Putnam was to furnish the kegs of powder and the fuses, and at the appointed time the next morning they were at the designated place. nated place.
The combatants seated themselves, and the fire was applied to the fuses. As it went flashing along the lieutenant became uneasy and turned pale, while the major sat composed and smiling in the presence of threatened danger.

As the fire drew near the kegs the lieutenant's courage failed him, and he arest and fled, while his antagonist remained scatted until the fuse was exhausted. The kegs were filled with onions! The lieutenant almost died of chagrin.—Life's Calendar.

His Name.

Tarsney of Missouri is a brother of the adjutant general of Colorado, and also of Tim Tarsney, who was for several years a member from Michigan. The latter used to tell an anecdore of his reception in a Connecticut city, where he was sent by the congressional campaign committee to do some political missionary work. The peo-ple turned out with becoming enthusiasm,

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "this tremendous and cultured audience that has assembled this evening will have the extreme felicity of listening to an orator whose voice has resounded with telling effect in the halls of the national legislature. He has often been honored by the people of his state with election to that great body, the house of representatives. great body, the house of representatives, and so great and potent has been his labor for his countrymen that throughout the length and breadth of this broad land his name has become a favorite household word."
